

What are the aggregate limits for federal student loans?

Last Modified on 02/06/2025 1:15 pm MST

Aggregate student loan limits are the maximum amount of student loans from the Federal Government that a student can receive during their education. There are different limits depending on whether you are an undergraduate or graduate student. For the most up-to-date information on aggregate limits, you can visit the Department of Education website. You can find out how much you have already borrowed by reviewing your history with your loan lender.

Undergraduates can borrow up to $57,500 between unsubsidized and subsidized student loans. No more than $23,000 within this limit can be subsidized loans.

Graduates can borrow up to $138,500. The amount borrowed in an undergraduate program is counted in this total amount.
